

This information is about a story that we wrote.

The story is about the Disability Royal Commission and what they said about preventive health care for people with intellectual disability.

The Disability Royal Commission wanted to find out:

- What happened to people with disability
- How to make things better for people with disability

Preventive health care are things that support people to

- Stay healthy
- Get better quickly when they are sick

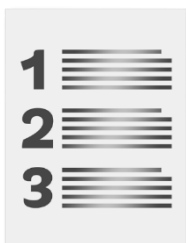

To write this story we read the Commission's reports.

We thought about how the Commission learnt what happened to people with intellectual disability.

We thought about important recommendations the Commission wrote about preventive health care.

Recommendations are what the Commission thinks we should do to make life better for people with disability.

We thought about the important recommendations the Commission did not write about preventive health care.

We said it was good that the Commission:

- spoke to people about their experiences
- used easy read and videos
- learnt about health care

We said it would have been good for the Commission to:

- invite more people with intellectual disability to share about their health care
- meet with people in different places.
- meet with people who do not live in the city
- use the word intellectual disability instead of cognitive disability

This is because people may not know cognitive disability includes intellectual disability.

We said that it was good that the Commission made recommendations to:

- make health care services for people with disability
- teach health care workers and disability workers
- make health information easy to understand
- keep checking if health care gets better for people with disability

We said that when people use the recommendations it is important to think about:

- the needs of all people with intellectual disability
- all parts of preventive health care
- how we can all work together to make sure people with intellectual disability get good preventive health care.
